

The “proofs” of God, or strong indications.

First, I’d say there should be no proofs of God. This is b/c it should be evident. It takes a leap of faith on purpose. Free will can’t really thrive if there’s proof. So, I wouldn’t expect there to ever be any proof.

1. No other life is worth living. If you think there is a God, and you live that way, life is better. If you think there is no God, and live that way, life is worse.
2. The God Matrix: God No God

 Be faithful: Good still good

 Don’t: Bad still bad
3. Look around. Imagine the creativity required for the complexity we observe. Sure, it could have all been made by chance, but what is the power behind chance? Isn’t it interesting that simple chance and time can create literally anything? Isn’t it suspicious to say that chance has created literally everything?
4. If we are able to conceive of the question “why”, that implies reasons exist. Why is a butterfly, if not for the sake of some God?
5. Life seems to emerge out of nowhere. Before a new baby girl is born, she already has all her eggs. Dividing cells are identical, until they’re not. Chemistry seems to animate in the presence of life, yet we can’t recreate it at any level.
6. If there is life and intelligence anywhere in the universe, then intelligent life is part of the universe.
7. If man exists, and evolves, and time is infinite, man will eventually evolve into a God-like figure. If that has already happened, and assume said being combined with Nature, then there are Gods. If time is infinite going backwards, then said being should have evolved into everything by now.
8. Reality is bounded by the irrational: It makes no sense to speak of time before time, or infinite time; or space inside or outside of space; s.t. the universe is irrational, which implies that perhaps the rational is God.
9. You can’t remember what happened before you were born, nor see what will happen after you die. Life is bounded by peculiarly scientifically impervious thresholds on both ends. Man can analyze all thing through science, except before and after life. These things make sense if there is eternal life.
10. “There are more things in Heaven and Earth, Horatio...” If man is just a bag of mostly water, then he cannot conceive of all the universe is, s.t. the universe is more even than our imaginations, and if man is not just a meat bag, then there is more to the universe than what is apparent. Either way, there is more to the universe.
11. Can’t you Feel it? The older I get the more I feel it.

Man's Religions:

The Old testament is just a celebration of the Great Escape from Egypt mixed in with some Jewish myths, a couple of prepper's guides, some bad poetry (in translation) and stories of old kingdoms. Moses, Noah and the rest were just men. Peter and Jonah were just lucky. Ezekiel saw aliens.

The New testament is just advertisements for Christ and the Apostles. Jesus and the Apostles were sophisticated manipulators and tax evaders.

Mohammad was just a religious man trying get out from under the Catholic Church.

The Gita is just a call to arms.

The Tao is correct, but answers little.

None of these books provide any definitive guidance.

If u want to learn how to live correctly, u have to ask yourself.

Everyone seems to have a conscience which will, at any given moment, if asked, taking everything you know into consideration, provide the right answer, as best you can discern it. Follow that.
